Oral Communication

Ms. Malahat

- Oral Communication:

➡ Definition of oral communication:

- "Oral communication is the act of transmitting messages from one person to another through the use of spoken words.In other words, a form of communication where you use your mouth and language as a medium to express your thoughts and feelings.

- Characteristics of Oral Communication:

- Pre-Planning

- The first characteristic of oral communication is pre-planning. Before communicating, one must plan the process of communicating the message to reach the audience.

- Certainty

- One must be clear about the message he delivers to the audience. Communication messages should always be backed up by research, facts, and statistics. Having certainty will not only give confidence to the speaker but also gives clarity to the audience.

- Conciseness
- Collection of the message to deliver is one part of the activity. The importance lies in how it is delivered. Structuring the logical sequence of the presentation to deliver the message will improvise the effectiveness of the message.
- Attractive Presentation
- As a presenter, an attractive presentation can support you to deliver a much complete and better message than the one without it. By visual presentation, your message can be effectively and accurately reached and understood by the audience.
- Consideration of the Receiver or Audience
- Knowing your audience is one of the critical aspects of planning your presentation. The elements like age group, background, demography, habits, and culture of your audience should be considered by the speaker

- Neutrality
- Maintaining neutrality is a critical aspect of speech delivery. You must be aware that your audience could come from different backgrounds. They may not be familiar with the vocabulary you use. They may not be familiar with the way you pronounce the words.
- One must practice neutrality in his accent, phrase, and vocabulary to reach his audience effectively.
- Realistic
- One must feel what he says. One must mean what he says. Being realistic with your speech will help you gain the trust of your audience. If you do not feel honesty with your message, you cannot get anyplace within your audience.

- Error Free
- If the information exchange in oral communication contains errors, then it makes the listeners confused and they may loose their confidence in speaker too. It is therefore important that the information communicated orally must be free from errors.
- Patience
- patience is also essential for oral communication. Understanding your audience during speech also requires some patience. While listening to your audience's queries, one must be patient enough to observe their points. Before responding to your audience, you must process your points patiently and then deliver them accordingly.

- Emotion Free
- One must learn to be prepared to face all types of audiences. Not all audiences may agree with you. Not all audiences may like you. Accepting these facts makes you emotion-free. In whatever scenario, learn to respect your audience and their opinion. It will set you free from any disturbance.
